- Earned doctorate in Educational Leadership, Educational Administration, or a closely related field
- Evidence of an active or developing research agenda leading to refereed scholarship, professional presentations, and external funding
- Ability to teach educational leadership courses inclusive of diversity and social justice perspectives
- Demonstrated success working with a highly diverse student body
- Strong interest in and commitment to the use of technology
- Demonstrated effective interpersonal skills and collegiality

Desirable Qualifications:

- Successful teaching experience at the graduate level
- Strong interest in the preparation of educational administrators
- Expertise in education finance or policy
- Involvement in state, regional, or national education associations
- Five or more years of school site administrative experience

The University of Redlands is one of the leading private liberal arts universities for the South West region, providing faculty with the opportunity to meaningfully engage and collaborate across schools. The School of Education is a newly reorganized graduate and professional school seeking to respond to the changing demands of one of America's most diverse metropolitan regions. We are committed to experiential learning and the diversity of ideas and people as we prepare leaders and professionals to enhance the learning and livelihoods of all people in increasingly complex educational contexts.

The newly formed Department of Leadership and Higher Education prepares students for careers in educational leadership and administration in both k-12 and in higher education through our higher education/students affairs and educational leadership/administration programs at MA and Ed.D. levels. Faculty in our department are productive researchers and/or experienced practitioners committed to meeting students where they are, providing opportunities for success, and working towards educational access and equity. We seek a dynamic, engaged colleague to join us in serving students, the university, and surrounding communities. We look forward to welcoming additional diverse perspectives to our intellectual community.

We seek a colleague who both demonstrates and will foster in students a pluralistic notion of values and who challenges assumptions and stereotypes. The University of Redlands is an Equal Opportunity/Equal Access Employer and actively encourages applications from minorities and members of other underrepresented groups. The University of Redlands does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, gender, gender identity, gender expression, genetic information, disability, age, marital status, or sexual orientation in its programs and activities.

This 9-month, full-time position begins September 2017.

TO APPLY: Send (a) a curriculum vita; (b) an unofficial transcript; (c) a cover letter that responds to the position criteria and also provides a brief statement of teaching philosophy, list of courses/subjects you have the expertise to teach, experiences with diverse populations, and demonstrated commitment to social and diversity inclusion; and (d) three letters of recommendation. You may also provide evidence of successful teaching if available. Digital application materials should be sent to the search coordinator, Heather Lambeth, at SOE_Employment@redlands.edu.
